Legal Responsibility of the Inebri-

Sociology and criminology formed the sub jects discussed yesterday morning at the jects discussed yesterday morning at the meeting of the medico-legal congress in New York. The session opened tions of the Post Office Department, but call attention to the executive instructions of the President of July 14, 1886, in New York. with Mr. Moril Z. Ellinger presiding. The business opened with five-minute address-.
The chairman in opening said there was no more important matter between the legal and medical sciences than the point where they met. This was important, especially in the matters of public health, and more particularly of insanity. Lawyers should keep their minds open, and law, like everything else, should be progressive. To the medical brethren he said if they bad a theory let them not be rigidly logical, let them rather be practical.

Dr. T. D. Crothers read a paper on "Legal Responsibility in Inebriety," which was laid over from Wednesday. He held that inebriety was a disease, and that excess of alcohol paralyzed the nerves and brain. inebriety was, a disease, and that excess of alcohol paralyzed the nerves and brain. In the discussion of the paper Albert Back said the courts very properly held the inebriate responsible for crime, because he knew what the effect of his taking alcoholic drink would be. He admitted that a man in an alcoholic trance was not really responsible for his actions, and it would be a dangerous thing to permit the inebriate to escape punishment for his crime.

Dr. Forbes Winslow said the only cure for the habitual drunkard was to lock him up.

Some Queer Poisons. From St. Paul's.

The Bombay government's analyst has been investigating the various poisons that are used in India, and in the course of his report he disposes of the old notion that pounded glass is the most deadly kind of substance you can mix with the food of any one against whom you entertain a particular grudge. "Pounded glass," he says, "is a most useful poison." He does not, of course, mean by this that it assists digestion or can safely be recommended as a pick-me-up after a hard day's work, but that it is useful in the sense of not doing very much harm to the person whose life is aimed at and leading very easily to the detection of the would-be murderer. If it is pounded until it becomes very fine, it causes merely slight discomfort and can be detected in the first mouthful of the food with which it is mixed. The same may be said, it appears, of diamond dust, tiger's whiskers, chopped hair and such like. After all, two pennorth of blackbeetle-killer is as good—or as bad—as anything, and you can get this at the nearest grocer's. Where, I wonder, would you have to go in search of tiger's whiskers or diamond dust? any one against whom you entertain a
